In recent years, the Covid-19 pandemic, de-globalization, geopolitical tensions, economic disruptions, energy predicament, ecological, environmental and climate crises have given rise to and shaped the “polycrisis” currently affecting nearly all nations and has had a profound impact on international politics, the world economy and global governance. What are the forces fragmenting our world—and how should we respond? How can we adapt to the new twists and turns in globalization? How can we drive economic alliances instead of military alliances in global governance? How can we return to multilateralism and multilateral cooperation? What is China’s role in the international community and how it can help navigate the current challenging situations? Perhaps those most capable of answering these questions are the experts, researchers and opinion leaders at the world’s leading think tanks.

On August 22, 2024, the Center for China and Globalization (CCG) and Springer Nature will jointly launch a new book, Enhancing Global Governance in a Fragmented World: Prospects, Issues, and the Role of China. During the launch and roundtable, experts, senior researchers and contributors to this edited volume will discuss recent developments and current trends in global governance, search for various solutions to the ills that currently plague the world and a way to create a future in which everyone benefits.

Enhancing Global Governance in a Fragmented World, edited by CCG President Henry Huiyao Wang and Secretary-General Mable Lu Miao, collects the combined wisdom of 30 leading figures from the global think tank community that emphasize a common, central theme through all of the 25 essays in this book, which is the need for a more universal, inclusive and multilateral approach to reforming global governance.

CCG and Springer Nature are currently publishing a series of eight books on “China and Globalization” in fields including global governance, diplomacy and international relations, and economy and commerce. This series is designed to collect a wide range of global views on issues related to China and globalization, the opportunities and challenges related to China’s rise and China’s role in global governance, global economy, global development and global security. The first of its kind, this series will feature the works of over two hundred global contributors, seeking to create a balanced global perspective by gathering the views of highly influential opinion leaders from both China and around the world.

About CCG

Founded in 2008 and headquartered in Beijing, the Center for China and Globalization (CCG) is China's leading global non-governmental think tank. It has more than ten branches and overseas office with over 100 fulltime researchers and staff engaged in research on globalization, global governance, international economy and trade, international relations and global migration. In the 2020 Global Go To Think Tank Index Report released by the University of Pennsylvania, the world's most authoritative think tank ranking, CCG was again recognized as one of the world's top 100 think tanks, ranking in 64th place globally.

While cultivating its own research teams, CCG has also built an international research network of leading experts in China and overseas. CCG has developed a variety of events and platforms, providing effective channels to exchange ideas between policymakers, experts, scholars, and industry leaders. CCG also plays an active role in non-governmental exchanges and Track II Diplomacy, becoming a valuable platform to aid mutual understanding between China and the rest of the world. As one of the first Chinese think tanks to "go global," CCG has held bilateral and multilateral events at the Paris Peace Forum, the Munich Security Conference, the World Economic Forum, and other important international events. CCG has been involved in promoting many national development and global governance policies. It regularly submits policy recommendations to relevant state agencies and ministries, many of which have been commented on by the central leadership and have served as reference for major decisions made by relevant departments, continually promoting government policymaking and institutional innovation. CCG has also been granted Special Consultative Status by the United Nations.
